

Anastin Teasley
SkullCandy

I was inspired to make this art piece because of the major I decided to go into. I chose to go into Radiology after I graduate from highschool. I have made a lot of my art pieces inspired by human anatomy since that is the class that ultimately pushed me towards my major. I like the gold-brown specks on the skull because it adds more definition to the art piece, it also pairs nicely with the small gold flecks in the black glaze.

Anastin Teasley
Through the Looking Hall

This art piece represents my fears of the unknown and change. The hands and winding hallway display not knowing what is coming or what I will endure. The fear of change is shown in the peeling wallpaper and holes in the walls as they have deteriorated in the building over the years. I liked creating this project because I got to understand what fear looked like to me and I enjoyed conveying my feelings through art. I also enjoyed experimenting with new textures and shading.

